SitePublish Overview

SitePublish is a Web Content Management System (WCMS) used for hosting a number of web sites for the University of Illinois. Supported by AITS, SitePublish provides an easy-to-use interface, allowing non-technical staff to create and manage web site content.

SitePublish provides features such as blogs, discussion forums, workspaces, forms, knowledge repositories, workflow, and web services integrations capabilities for creating interactive and dynamic web sites.

AITS provides support for SitePublish including: application support, server support, University authentication integration, security vulnerability testing, web design assistance, accessibility review services, as well as SitePublish training and support for site administrators and content managers among participating units.

AITS began offering SitePublish as a service in early 2011, initially to provide a way to host a small number of University Administration web sites. In 2012, SitePublish services were made available to the campuses for additional web site hosting. As of April 2014, SitePublish is used to support 42 web sites across the University, with several more sites in development.

SitePublish currently supports website hosting needs for over 20 different units across the University including: AITS, OBFS, Office of the CIO, University Relations, Office of the President, University Capital Programs and Real Estate Services, University Human Resources, UIC Human Resources, CITES, Office of the Provost UIUC, UIUC Honors Program, University Audits, University Ethics Office, UIUC School of Chemical Sciences, Office of Treasury Operations, USFSCO, UIC Office of International Students, UIC College of Dentistry, Campus Development/Advancement Offices, and University of Illinois Federal Relations.
